

Patty Rosborough

Patty Rosborough is one of the top headlining comics in the country with her hard hitting, high-energy style of comedy. She got her start in New York City appearing with the improv troupe, 'Future Schlock' and in the Off Broadway production of 'Gay Dracula,' a campy romp where she bared it all. Her first stint on television was with Jon Stewart on Comedy Central's 'Short Attention Span Theatre.'

Patty has been seen on Showtime, Comedy Central and on the BBC's 'The World Stands Up.' She has also performed at the 'Montreal Just for Laughs Comedy Festival' and is the winner of NYC's prestigious 'Charlie Award.'

Patty plays a drunk in Adrien Lynne's film, 'Jacob's Ladder,' an angry ex-wife with Kevin Meany on the webisode, 'In the Middle' (Salon.com.) and a hard drinking, nightmare of a mother in Drew Chiminec's comedy, 'Raising the Dead.'

Patty is the winner of the 'Ladies of Laughter Comedy Competition' and tours across the U.S. with her standup act. She is also a regular at the 'Borgata' in Atlantic City and performs at New York city comedy clubs.

Patty was most recently featured on the podcast, 'Babes in Boyland,' interviewed by her daughter, Molly Kornfeld and Victoria Hoffman.
